*Collierville's story began in 1836,
when the small farm town made the big city newspaper...*

Every town has a story to tell: stories that include heroic acts, charming characters and tragedies
that made them stronger.

In 1836, Jesse R. Collier
advertised in the Memphis Enquirer "the town of Collier for sale." That ad was the beginning of growth that continues...

❖1851 Stagecoach stop built in the location of the present day Pepsi Americas distribution plant.

❖1852 Memphis-Charleston Railroad opened, improving transportation to and from Collierville. The passenger fare from Collierville to Memphis was 75 cents and children under 12 rode for half-price.

❖1861 A group of 80 Collierville men organized the Wigfall Grays unit in honor of Texas Senator Louis Trezevant Wigfall who was known for his moving speeches supporting the Confederate cause. On May 11, the unit received orders to leave Collierville on May 15. The women of Collierville had previously gathered together to make uniforms for the soldiers, but there were still four uniforms left to be made when the orders were received. After much deliberation, the women decided to work on sacred Sunday to finish the four uniforms.

❖October 11, 1863 The Battle of Collierville, one of the bloodiest Civil War battles in Shelby County, took place. Confederate General James R. Chalmers received orders from the Commander of the Mississippi Cavalry, Major General Stephen D. Lee, to move his forces against the Federals on the Memphis-Charleston Railroad to distract the Federals attention from the movement of the Mississippi Cavalry. The strategy was to divert the Federals attention by sending a false report that a Confederate force would attack Corinth, MS. This strategy would give the Confederates the opportunity to gain control of the railroad at Collierville. About 10:00 a.m. on this Sunday morning, the Confederates completely surprised the Federals with an attack that lead to the capture of a large number of prisoners, forty wagons and other valuable loot. The attack had been executed as planned until around noon when General Sherman's train unexpectedly arrived. The Confederates eventually captured the train, taking 15-20 more prisoners as well as Sherman's prized possession, his horse "Dolly." About this time,

Federal reinforcements arrived and General Chalmers realized many lives would be lost, so he ordered a withdrawal not knowing that the Federals had no heavy artillery.

Collierville's location on the rail line placed it in the midst of several Civil War skirmishes. In all, there were about 10 battles fought in or near Collierville. The Civil War was devastating to Collierville as the original Town was burned to the ground and many lives were lost.

❖1867 Harrison Irby and Dr. Virginus Leake bought approximately 90 acres at the present-day Town Square location. They divided the acreage into lots, creating a business district to rise from the ashes that the Civil War left behind.

❖1872 Collierville's Town Square business district was established and included a park as its centerpiece. The park included a two-story bandstand as well as peacocks and a deer. The bandstand stood for 90 years hosting town bands and Beale St. performers such as W.C. Handy. To this day, Collierville's Historic Town Square is the only one in Shelby County and unique in the fact that it is not anchored by a courthouse.

❖May 7, 1875 Grand Calico Ball held. After the Civil War, many families could not afford silk and satin for fancy dresses. The organizers of the Ball did not want any of the young ladies in the area to feel uncomfortable attending the Ball in calico dresses while others were in fancier dresses. Therefore, the Ball became known as the Calico Ball so that everyone would feel comfortable attending regardless of their apparel.

❖1876 Collierville was one of the heaviest shipping points on the Memphis-Charleston Railroad with over 12,000 bales of cotton being shipped to Memphis annually.

❖1878 Magnolia Cemetery was established at the Brown family burying grounds. The gazebo located in the older section of the cemetery is one of the oldest landmarks in Collierville. It is believed to have been erected in 1882. Magnolia Cemetery is the final resting place for approximately 56 men who served in the Confederate Army including one Unknown Soldier who was buried in the Brown Family cemetery.

❖August 1878 Tragedy hit Collierville and much of the South with the Yellow Fever epidemic. Collierville established a rigid quarantine against people and goods from Memphis and surrounding areas. Many families and individuals fled the area, leaving only a few to care for the sick and bury the dead. The Civil War was a time of great suffering for Collierville, but Yellow Fever crept into the Town indiscriminately claiming the lives of young and old, male and female, rich and poor. Many victims of the Yellow Fever epidemic are buried in Magnolia Cemetery.

❖1887 The oldest business in Collierville, McGinnis Hardware, opens as Thomas J. Morris Lumber and is still located on the Town Square. To this day, entering the hardware store is like stepping back in time. Other Town Square businesses that once contributed to the local economy included car dealerships, general stores, a pharmacy, banks, a theater and hotels. Collierville's strong economy began on the Town Square and expanded to include several industries such as cotton, lumber, cheese and toys.

❖1915 W.W. McGinnis had oak trees hauled from his farm and planted in the Town Square Park. Many of these beautiful towering oaks still stand in the Park.

❖1932 The Great Depression hit Collierville and the entire nation. A new building for Collierville High School was one of the first projects in Tennessee built by the Civilian Work Administration (which later became the Works Progress Authority). The plans for the school were elaborate in order to create the maximum number of jobs. The auditorium was the most sophisticated in the area and was used as a theater on Fridays. Afternoon matinees were 15 cents and evening shows were 25 cents.

❖1933 Due to the boll weevil, cotton was no longer profitable for many farmers. Collierville becomes a dairy town and Swift & Co. opens a hoop cheese plant in Collierville. To celebrate Collierville's dairy industry a Cheese Carnival is started and lasts for several days. Events included concerts, dances, parades and the announcement of the Cheese Carnival Queen and her court.

❖1940-41 The United Daughters of the Confederacy erected a marker on the Town Square in memory of the Civil War battles fought in Collierville.

They also led the construction of concrete walkways in the form of St. Andrews Cross, just as it appears on the Confederate Flag. The park became known as Confederate Park.

❖1944 Collierville was in need of a new depot. Due to the scarcity of building supplies, arrangements were made to have the LaGrange, TN depot cut in half, placed on two flat train cars and transported to Collierville. The "new" depot opened on October 3, 1944.

❖1955 A tornado struck Collierville destroying many businesses on the Town Square and leveling the historic 2-story bandstand.

❖1977 The original Collierville stagecoach stop was relocated to the Town Square and restored to resemble the original 1850s structure and interior décor.

❖1984 Powell Road Park opened with four baseball fields, four soccer fields, four lighted tennis courts, a playground and a 1.2 mile paved walking trail. The park also included a Community Center with a basketball court, racquetball courts and meeting rooms.

❖1987 Harrell Theatre opened to the public presenting Winnie the Pooh.

❖1993-1995 The Historic Collierville Town Square is renovated to include brick walkways, new benches and a musical clock.

❖1994 The Collierville Greenbelt Trail Master Plan was adopted to include over 60 miles of trails and sidewalk connections. The system will eventually connect to other trails in Shelby County and will allow pedestrians and bikers to go from Collierville to the Mississippi River.

Battle of Collierville

Preparation for the Battle of Collierville began on October 10, 1863 when an order was sent to cut the telegraph wires and destroy the railroad tracks so that communication among the Union troops would be impossible. Confederate Majors Michell and Couzens fulfilled the order to the east of Collierville, but Major Burrows and Lieutenant Colonel Marshall were not able to complete the assignment to the west. This oversight would have a major effect on the outcome of the battle.

On the morning of Sunday, October 11, around 4:00 a.m., General James R. Chalmers ordered Lieutenant Colonel W.L. Duckworth, commander of the 7th Tennessee Cavalry, and Colonel R.V. Richardson, commander of the 12th Tennessee Cavalry, to move toward Collierville from the Holly Springs area. Colonel Duckworth was in command of Captain John T. Lawler (7th Tennessee Cavalry) and Lieutenant-Colonel Robert McCullough (2nd Missouri Cavalry). The 2nd Missouri and 7th Tennessee traveled toward Collierville by Sycamore Road. It was planned that the 2nd Missouri would attack from the northwest of the fort while the 7th Tennessee would attack from the southwest. Colonel Richardson and his men, the Colonels John McGuirk (3rd Mississippi State Cavalry), H.B. Hovis (1st Mississippi Partisans) James Neely (13th Tennessee Cavalry), James Green (12 Tennessee Cavalry), William Inge (12th Mississippi Battalion), and Frances Stewart (15th Tennessee Cavalry) traveled toward Collierville from Byhalia. The plan was for the 3rd Mississippi and 1st Mississippi Partisans to travel to the east of Collierville and attack the 7th Illinois Cavalry camped to the north of town, and then attack the fort from the rear, while the 12th, 13th, and 15th Cavalries traveled to the west of Collierville to attack the fort. The 12th Mississippi would fight with both Reneau and Buckner's Batteries from the south. The battle was planned around fifteen miles south of Collierville using a topographical map. Around 9:00 a.m. Duckworth and his men reached Collierville and were stationed by the railroad. Around 10:00 a.m. they were signaled by a bugle call and charged toward the fort. Also around 9:00 a.m. Richardson and his men surprised the Federal pickets, or guards, stationed one mile east of Collierville. The leading officer was killed and all but two of the pickets were captured. Because the two pickets had escaped, Richardson felt it was urgent to reach Collierville before they reported the attack. The 13th Tennessee traveled ahead using Mount Pleasant Road. They believed this would place them to the west of the Town; however, the troop came out to the east of Collierville. The Town did not lay as far to the east as they had believed. This mistake placed the Soldiers directly in the line of battle already started by the 2nd Missouri and 7th Tennessee. Yet, the battle seemed to be going in the Southern favor. After nearly two hours of fighting, General Chalmers felt the battle was going well enough to ask for surrender. Captain Goodman, an Assistant Adjutant-General to Chalmers, was sent to the Union troops with a flag of truce.

Union General
William Tecumseh Sherman

Yet, while Chalmers was preparing for the surrender, a train arrived that changed the course of the battle. The 13th U.S. Regulars and Union General William Tecumseh Sherman were by chance aboard the train, though this was unknown to General Chalmers. The train originally passed the depot and likely would have continued its journey to Corinth, Mississippi, yet Sherman was informed that a battle was in progress. Sherman sent two men, the Colonels Anthony and Dayton to meet Captain Goodman. He instructed Anthony and Dayton to "keep [Goodman] in conversation as long as possible" so that he may have time to prepare for the battle. Sherman had few men and no artillery and wanted to keep this a secret from the enemy. Sherman ordered the train to back up to the depot. He then ordered a wire to be sent to Memphis and Germantown for Union reinforcements to come immediately (had the wires been cut to the west of Collierville, this message could not have been sent, making it unlikely that reinforcements would have arrived).

Captain Goodman was sent back to the Confederate lines without surrender and the battle was again resumed, this time with the Union train as an added target. Sherman's soldiers set fire to all the houses near the battle so that the Southern troops would be unable to hide. The train was finally captured by the 7th Tennessee, and was set on fire using the Union's good uniforms for kindling. Yet, the train burned very slowly enabling the Northern soldiers to regain control. In an account given by Albert Henry Dashiell Perkins, a soldier of the 7th Tennessee, he and his fellow troops boarded the train and "proceeded to make [them] selves at home." Perkins and his comrades especially enjoyed the food on the train before coming to the car housing the enemies' horses. Perkins mounted the first horse that he came to and rode away just before the fire reached the train car. Among the horses that Perkins and his fellow soldiers captured was Sherman's favorite horse, Dolly.

Around 3:00 in the afternoon, Corse's Division, the Union reinforcements, arrived from Memphis. General Chalmers realized that the attack planned on the rear of the fort was not going to happen. The 3rd Mississippi had succeeded in attacking the camp and wagons of the 7th Illinois but was not able to proceed further. With the addition of Corse's Division and the lack of a rear attack, Chalmers decided the battle could not be won by his troops. After nearly five hours of fighting, Chalmers ordered his men to retreat back to Mississippi.

Wigfall Grays

The Wigfall Grays were the proud unit of men from Collierville who served their country during the Civil War. Collierville's patriotism was called to action on April 15, 1861 when a Texas senator named Louis Wigfall gave such a moving speech to the town that the men immediately formed a unit of volunteers. Senator Wigfall left Washington, D.C. upon President Abraham Lincoln's call for troops to fight in war. Wigfall rode the Memphis-Charleston Railroad toward his home in Texas. He stopped in each town along the route to rally the citizens, imploring them to protect their homes and fight for the Southern cause. Local lore holds that Senator Wigfall made a speech in Collierville. The residents were motivated by his eloquence. At a time when the population of Collierville was only 500, 80 men, between the ages of 18-35, volunteered for service. They named the unit the Wigfall Grays after their inspiration and the color of the Confederate uniforms.

The Grays drilled on the lawn of The Methodist Church, located at the corner of State Line Road (Poplar Avenue) and Main Street, while the ladies of Collierville sewed uniforms inside. On May 11, 1861 the Grays received orders to report to Germantown by May 15. Realizing that the uniforms would not be completed in time, the ladies made the decision to sew on Sunday to finish the uniforms in time. During this time period it was considered sinful to do any type of work on Sundays. Such a scandalous decision is a testimony to the determination of the ladies and to the importance they felt the work held.

The Grays were sworn into the Tennessee Army on May 15, 1861 and into Confederate service the following August 17th. They were in Company C of the Fourth Tennessee Infantry Regiment. The Grays fought in many major battles of the War including Shiloh, Chickamauga, Jonesboro, and Missionary Ridge. In 1864 the Fourth fought from Chattanooga to Atlanta to delay the Union forces so that better defense could be built for Atlanta. Despite the losses they experienced in these battles, the Grays reenlisted on April 25, 1862 for two more years.

The Grays earned a reputation for being an excellent unit of soldiers. Merrit Brown of the Grays received the Medal of Honor after the battle at Murfreesboro. The Fourth was also the first unit to reenlist with no time limit. This action inspired many others to do so. When General Hood ordered a retreat from Tennessee into North Carolina, he asked that the best troops be loaned to General Forrest and the 4th, including the Grays, were identified as the best. This would be the last action for the Grays. By this time there were only 20 of the original men left. Company C had a total of 111 recruits over the course of the war. 16 were killed in the battle. 17 died of wounds, 16 were discharged for wounds or illness, 15 were missing, 12 had been transferred to other units, and 5 joined Union forces after capture rather than go to prison. Only 34 soldiers were left on the roll at the end of the war.

The Grays returned home to a very different Collierville then the one they had left. Nearly all the buildings had been demolished. They were distressed to hear of the military actions in Collierville but were unaware of the extent of the damages because they were fighting in another theater of the war. Yet the men of the community worked together to rebuild their Town and were influential in creating the place that Collierville has become today.

Fought from Chattanooga to Atlanta. August The fall of Atlanta.	August 20 1864	At the Battle of Lovejoy, so few Grays remain the unit is organized with other units. The Grays and their regiment identified as the best infantry. Loaned to General Forrest for retreat to North Carolina.	April 9 1865	Lee surrenders. Civil War officially ends. 34 of total 111 Grays return home to Collierville.

The Morton Museum of Collierville History is housed in the building that was once the Collierville Christian Church (built 1873, with renovations in 1906 and in the 1950s). Fondly known as the "white church" the Museum is located at the intersection of Poplar Avenue and North Main Street; a gateway to Collierville's Historic District. The Morton Museum opened its doors to the public on June 15, 2012 following extensive renovations from 2007 – 2012. It offers changing exhibitions every 12 weeks, a reading room, a permanent exhibition gallery, education programs and community events, a visitor center, and always FREE admission.
